Vision 2020: International VET regulatory benchmarking

Rod Camm, Managing Director, NCVER

Vet Regulation – How does Australia compare?

Quality is and must remain a key platform of Australia’s VET sector. Employer, student and government confidence in the sector is paramount.

An international benchmarking study has identified a number of key themes emerging from like sectors around the world. There is a convergence of policy and practice, where systems focus on economic competitiveness through education. This requires continuous improvement of the sector, with providers being asked to take responsibility, through initiatives such as self-assessment for the quality of their offerings.

A responsive regulatory system will see the use of a graduated approach to regulation, including well designed standards, self-assessment, escalating regulatory intervention based on risk and a focus on teaching quality.
